There are also many tourist attractions in the area, so there is plenty of places to visit. A daytrip to The Cotswolds is the most ideal way to experience this picture-perfect area, giving you a real sense of natural beauty and true English countryside at its best.

If you're visiting England or touring the South West, then visit the charming region of The Cotswolds. The Cotswolds has been named as the second largest out of 38 areas of outstanding natural beauty in England. It's no surprise that visitors come from all over the world to see the true quintessential area, the charming countryside living and England at its best. The Cotswolds area spreads into several counties including Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, Wiltshire and Warwickshire with an increasing population of 139,000 people. The area is well-known for the Cotswold Hills, a huge green area of gently sloping rolling hills that surround market towns and villages that nestle near woodland. The Cotswolds was once famous for being one of the biggest producers of wool in Europe and has since remained unspoilt and peaceful when the cloth trade moved to the North of the country.

Pretty Villages & Country Lanes

Most of the Cotswold villages are accessible through twisting country lanes that are lined with trees and surrounded by lush, green fields. Cotswold villages are often a picturesque view of stunning thatched cottages, Cotswold stone houses, wildflower banks and trickling streams. In the winter months, the villages have a wonderfully snug setting with log fires, cosy cottages and the aroma of home cooking. During the spring, spring flowers and daffodils line grass verges and in the summer the smell of freshly cut grass is typical of life in The Cotswolds. Many Cotswold villages are historical such as Bibury where the well-known Arlington Row cottages fascinate thousands of visitors every year. Copse Hill Road in the village of Lower Slaughter is a street that was awarded the title of 'most romantic street of the year' several times. Cotswold villages have a spirit of romance and a somewhat relaxed vibe, giving a wonderful impression of charming and magnetic country life.
